

What we believe

We are a mainstream Christian Congregation. Our faith and our worship while rooted in tradition, aims to be living and relevant to today's world with its varied issues and challenges. We believe in God revealed supremely in Jesus Christ; we treasure the inspired writings of the Bible and the work of the Holy Spirit in empowering our lives as Christian people. We do not regularly recite creeds but we affirm broad statements of faith and church order, following the Christian liturgical calendar but not normally following set forms of worship. We respect the conscience of the individual believer in our search for God together. Local decisions about our Church are made at quarterly church meetings by those who worship regularly.

Welcome...

The URC in Chappel is a place where you will find a warm welcome and a heritage of Protestant Reformed Church worship. A place of friendship where tradition and new ideas mix, a place where all may find something to strengthen and refresh their lives

...A place for you

How we began

The roots of the United Reformed Church in Chappel, one of hundreds of similar churches across the country, are in the 16th century English Church Reformation. Some Christians, later known as Independents or Congregationalists, wanted to reform the Church of England. Their numbers were greatly increased after 1662 by following clergy who were ejected from their Anglican churches for refusing to conform to an Act of Uniformity in worship.

Our kind of church

Nonconformist congregations grew all over the country, despite persecution, and by the 19th century had won recognition and their civil liberty. They became known for their preaching and action in support of people's welfare and education and civil liberties.

Nine local christians

Chappel's Independent Congregation began as recently as 1901, when nine local people met to start a Free Church in the village and rented and converted a former builder's storeroom, which was later bought, and extended. Worship and fellowship has continued on Rose Green ever since and the Chapel has in the past held a flourishing Sunday school, a youth group, and women's and prayer groups. The premises were completely refurbished for the Centenary in 2001.

Part of a worldwide fellowship

Since 1972, Chappel Congregational Church has been part of the United Reformed Church, a coming together of Congregational, English Presbyterian and the former denomination known as the Churches of Christ in a scheme of union in England and Wales. Subsequently Congregational Churches in Scotland became part of the United Reformed Church. The URC is part of the World Communion of Reformed Churches.

We here are linked with Lion Walk United Reformed Church, Colchester, through the oversight of its Minister.

We meet for worship every Sunday at 6.30pm, and celebrate Holy Communion monthly.

Baptisms, weddings and funerals by arrangement with the Minister. We play an active part in the life of the village and today enjoy a good relationship with the parish church.

Our music

The Chapel has a fine small pipe organ, registered as of national historical importance, and is known locally for the quality of its music and enthusiastic hymn-singing.

Our hope

It is our hope that all who come will find friendliness and openness, and something of the love, peace and presence of God
